ABSTRACT

There has been considerable discussion in the literature of higher education regarding significant changes in student body characteristics. The data in this document examines distribution of students at the State University of New York system by age group and sex. Tables array four fundamental student characteristics: age, sex, level (graduate/undergraduate), and load (part-time/full-time). Tables in Part II array age and sex by level and load for each institution of the state university; Part I contains summary tables for institutional types by headcount and percentage distribution. Two points of particular interest that can be made on the basis of this data are: (1) the majority of undergraduate students at the state university are over 18 and less than 23 years of age, but 33.1 percent are over 23 years of age; (2) 48.4 percent of the undergraduates under the age of 35 are women, but 60.3 percent of the undergraduates over the age of 35 are women. INTRODUCTION

In the Fall of 1974, the Office of Institutional Research began to collect data on the age group and sex of students at the State University; this marked the first time that data on age were collected on a system-wide scale.

The potential importance of this information is probably manifest. There has been considerable discussion in the literature of higher education regarding significant changes in student body characteristics, e.g., the possible emergence of the older, adult student. The data contained in this report will, for the first time, allow us to examine the distribution of students by age group and sex. As this data is accumulated over a period of years, information on trends, in addition to a single point-in-time profile, will become available.

The tables in this report array four fundamental student characteristics: age, sex, level (graduate/undergraduate), and load (part-time/full-time). Because the significance of data is relative to the data user's network of interests and problems, the data are presented here in a manner designed to provide maximum flexibility and hence utility. The tables in Part II array age and sex by level and load for each institution of the State University; Part I contains summary tables for institutional types by headcount and percent distribution.

While there are a wealth of inferences and observations that can be made on the basis of the data contained in this report, there are two points of particular interest. As one might expect, the majority of undergraduate students at the State University are over 18 and less than 23 years of age. However, there are 119,257 undergraduate students who are 23 years of age and older; this is 33.1 percent of the total undergraduate enrollment. Of these 119,257 students, 88,802 or 74.5 percent are enrolled at community colleges. This reflects both the large non-traditional enrollment at the State University as well as the impact of the community colleges on this group of students. A second point of considerable interest is the distribution of women undergraduates above and below the age of 35. Of the 318,866 undergraduates under the age of 35, 154,182 or 48.4 percent are women. The percent of women changes significantly in the group of students who are 35 years of age and older. There are 37,262 undergraduates who are 35 and older; of this number, 22,456 or 60.3 percent are women. This apparently lends credence to the view that there will be larger proportions of women students enrolling after the age when families are established and children are in school. It is also extremely interesting to note that of the 22,456 women 35 and over, 18,630 or 83.0 percent of them are attending community colleges. Again, this is indicative of the role of the community colleges in non-traditional education.
